Research Centre for Social Psychology and Mental Illness

Prof. (Dr.) Laveena D'Mello

The research center for Social psychology and Mental illness works for research on a variety of mental illnesses and social issues. Counseling is fundamentally associated with psychology. There are a number of reasons for this association. First, the goals of counseling have a mental component in them. In varying degrees, all counseling approaches focus on altering how people feel, think and act so that they may live their lives more effectively. Counseling is not static but involves movement between and within the minds of both counselors and clients. Thus, it is a professional relationship that empowers diverse individuals, families, and groups to accomplish mental health, wellness, education, and career goals. Mental illness through counseling will try to bring wellness, personal growth, career, education, and empowerment concerns. People's problems may require short-term or long-term interventions that focus on just one person or with multiple individuals who are related or not related to each other. Research center can also address the social problems like poverty, AIDS, Crimes, Juvenile Delinquency, and Suicide, Alcoholism and drug addictions and social change. This center will also insist studies related to mental health, the attitude of the individual and psychosocial problems. The center covers all the sector of the society without any discrimination of age and community. The Scope is to cover psychological, Physical and Social issues of the present society. The main aim of the center is to cover Social psychology and mental illness. And the objectives are to cover various case studies related the mental illness and how to overcome the problems through counseling. The adjustment by the related members so to help in the process of transforming the effected and affected persons to lead a normal life.
